

List of High Courts in India

[UPSC Notes]

What is the High Court of India?

The highest appellate courts in each of India's States and Union Territories are known as the High Courts of India. A high court, however, only exercises its original criminal and civil jurisdiction if the lower courts are not permitted by statute to hear such cases due to a lack of pecuniary or territorial jurisdiction. High courts may also have original jurisdiction over a specific case if the constitution, state legislation, or federal law expressly grants them that authority.

The majority of high courts' activity is made up primarily of writ petitions filed in accordance with Articles 226 and 227 of the Indian constitution and appeals from subordinate courts. A high court's original jurisdiction includes writ jurisdiction as well. In India, there are 25 High Courts, six of which have jurisdiction over several States or UTs. Among the Union Territories, Delhi has its own High Court. A Chief Justice and any other judges chosen by the President of India make up each High Court.

Historical Background of High Courts in India

A High Court and a system of subordinate courts make up the State Judiciary. An integral cog in the country's judicial system, let's trace its inception.

- On the recommendation of the Law Commission, the Indian High Courts Act 1861, which proposed the formation of High Courts in the three Presidency cities of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay in place of the Supreme Court, was adopted in 1858. Over time, further High Courts were created.
- The High Court of Calcutta approved a charter in May 1862, and the High Courts of Bombay and Madras followed suit in June 1862. As an outcome, the Calcutta High Court was established as the first High Court in the nation.
- The High Courts' organisational framework and legal foundation are established by the Constitution.
- There are 25 High Courts currently for 28 States and 8 Union Territories. The Andhra Pradesh High Court is a recent addition to the region. It becomes operational on January 1st, 2019.

Appointment of the High Court Judges

There is a set procedure that is followed for the appointment of High Court judges. It has been briefed in the pointers below;

- A High Court's judges are chosen by the President.
- However, before assigning judges to High Courts other than the Chief Justice, the President must contact the Governor of the State, the Chief Justice of India, and the Chief Justice of that High Court.
- In case of a transfer of an HC judge, the President may transfer High Court judges after consulting with the Chief Justice of India, as per Article 222,

Tenure, Removal and Salary of High Court Judges

The details briefly explaining the tenure, process of removal and the salary of High Court judge have been listed below;

Tenure

- A High Court judge who is appointed permanently holds office until age 62.
- The President decides on any disagreements regarding the age of judges after consulting with the Chief Justice of India; the President's judgement is final.
- A judge is not in the office while the President is in office.

Removal

- On the suggestion of the Parliament, the President may order the removal of a judge from his position.
- Only misbehaviour and incapacity are grounds for removal.
- The order is approved after each House of Parliament gives a speech that is supported by a majority of the entire House and a majority of two-thirds of the total number of members from each House present at the time and voting.

Salary and Emoluments

- According to Article 221, a High Court judge is eligible for pension and leave-of-absence benefits that Parliament may periodically decide upon.
- However, this cannot be altered to the Judge's detriment once he has been appointed.

Jurisdiction and Powers of the High Courts

The High Courts are the superior judicial body in a state. The institution holds a lot of powers and responsibilities in its jurisdiction's ambit. That has been discussed below;

- Territorial Jurisdiction
 - The territorial limits of a state coincide with the jurisdiction of a high court.
 - The High Court's authority does, however, extend to those areas if the Parliament creates a High Court for two or more States or expands its jurisdiction to Union Areas.
 - The Constitution does not provide a full definition of the High Court's authority, jurisdiction, or other administrative functions.

- Original Jurisdiction
 - The other High Courts primarily have appellate authority, however, the High Courts of the Presidency Towns have original and appellate jurisdiction.
 - Only cases involving admiralty, probate, matrimonial law, and contempt of court fall under the original jurisdiction of the other High Court. The Presidency High Courts used to have initial jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases.
 - All High Courts, however, lost their initial criminal jurisdiction as a result of the Criminal Procedure Code of 1973. Now only civil cases with a value above a certain threshold fall under the original jurisdiction.

- Appellate Jurisdiction
 - All High Courts consider appeals in both civil and criminal cases from both their subordinate tribunals and their original side as they function as appellate courts.
 - Several High Courts permit intra-court appeals. From a single judge's ruling, an appeal may be made to a division bench of the same High Court.
 - On the other hand, tribunals established in accordance with the law governing the nation's military services are outside the purview of the High Courts.

- Writ Jurisdiction
 - According to Article 226 of the Constitution, the High Courts have the authority to issue directives, orders, or writs for the enforcement and protection of Fundamental Rights as well as for any other reason.

Functions of the High Courts in India

Being one of the most important judicial bodies of the country, the High Courts have numerous functions that account for the smoother administration of justice to the masses. These have been explained below;

Administrative and Supervisory functions of the High Courts

- Every High Court is guaranteed to have complete control over the employees under Article 229 of the Constitution.
- In accordance with this Article, the Chief Justice of a High Court has the power to designate Court employees.
- Additionally, he has the power to control employee working conditions and dismiss any employee who is employed by the Court.

- The highest court in a state's legal system is called a High Court. According to Article 227, a High Court has the authority to supervise and direct the lower courts in all legal and administrative affairs.

Court of Record for Subordinate courts

- The lower courts must abide by the High Courts' decision.
- All upcoming cases will be related to their methods and judgments.
- It has the power to punish anyone who disobeys it or one of its lower courts.
- It can also search the files of its inferior courts.

Superintendence

- Every High Court has the authority to oversee all courts and tribunals functioning within its territorial jurisdiction, with the exception of those dealing with the Armed Forces.
- The High Court establishes guidelines and standards for how these courts must do their business in addition to overseeing and managing their operations.

The High Court's power

- Demand the restoration of the judgments from lower courts;
- Enact and publish general rules controlling the conduct of such courts' proceedings and defining forms;
- cases are transferred from one court to another, and prescribe the formats in which the officers of any such courts need to maintain their records and accounts.
- Under Article 235, the High Court may also establish guidelines for the appointment, promotion, and absence of lower court personnel.
- Judicial Review Authority: The High Court has the authority to examine the constitutionality of legislative and executive orders issued by the federal and state governments. Our constitution does not include the term "judicial review," but Articles 13 and 226 explicitly provide the High Court with this authority.

What is the Difference between Writ Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court and High Courts?

The writ jurisdiction is a common ground between the Supreme Court of India and the High Courts. Below, is a table that concisely differentiates between the two:

Supreme Court	High Court
Only in cases when a basic right has been breached can the Supreme Court issue writs.	High Courts have the authority to issue writs for the enforcement of both basic rights and common citizens' rights. As a result, the High Court has wider jurisdiction than the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court is mandated to issue writs under Article 32.

The High Courts have the discretion to provide relief to the harmed party using their writ jurisdiction.

The entire nation is within the purview of the Supreme Court's territorial jurisdiction.

The High Courts only have a little amount of territorial authority.
